How does education determine how likely someone is to vote in a Presidential election?

398,745 households in the U.S. were surveyed for this question.

Out of the 398,745 households surveyed for this question, 79,228 said they never vote in the presidential election.

19.87% of the households surveyed for this question said they never vote in the presidential election.

28,892 people with only a high school education said they never vote in the presidential election.

36% of people who never vote in the presidential election only have a high school education.

People with only a high school education are 43% more likely to never vote in the presidential election than the rest of the population.